

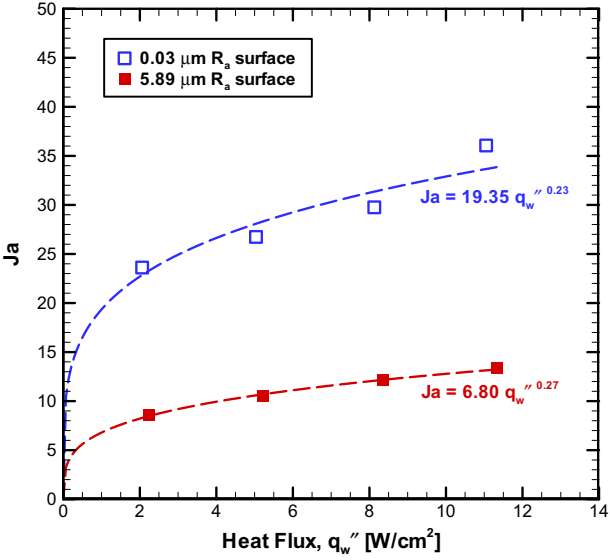

Fig. 11. Variation of Jakob number with heat flux applied at the surface.

tions are fully predictive, si must be obtained from the e curve.

5.2. Departure frequency

The measured bubble de respect to Ja in Fig. 13a. As fo tal frequency data do not s superheat or with heat flux are lower than for the roug a given heat flux, with less Fig. 13b, the measured bub as their product with depar similarly shows the product the diameter $\left(f^{\frac{1}{2}}D_d\right)$, as this Mikic and Rohsenow (1969a pared to predictions from se

Jakob and Fritz (1931):

$$fD_d = 0.078$$

Peebles and Garber (1953):